Transfer Student Guidelines

- A transfer student is defined as a student who has attended an institution of higher education and has received credits that may count toward a baccalaureate degree. Status at UMass Lowell is determined by the number of transferable credits.
- All transfer students are required to list all courses not shown on their transcripts. This listing can be completed on Page 2 of the application.
- The University of Massachusetts Lowell subscribes to the Commonwealth Transfer Compact and Mass Transfer/Joint Admissions Program.
- The University of Massachusetts Lowell intends to maintain flexibility in the transfer of qualified students. Students should indicate the major they intend to pursue. The number of transfer students accepted to each degree program will be determined by existing vacancies in the department. Students who transfer into certain restricted majors may be required to take certain aptitude and achievement tests, and should be advised that transfer credits accepted by the University may not be applicable to certain majors. Interviews and auditions may also be required in some cases.
- Transfer students for whom English is not a first language are advised that unless they have completed two years of English composition with a "C" or better at an American university, they must fulfill the TOEFL requirements (see page i). All transcripts from international institutions must be evaluated at the Center for Education Documentation (P.O. Residency Status for Tuition Classification

Am I eligible for In-State tuition rates (Massachusetts Resident)? What is my residency status for tuition classification?

As a state institution, UMass Lowell sets tuition and fees for undergraduate and graduate students based on residency classification regulations from the Massachusetts Department of Higher Education and the New England Board of Higher Education. First, the applicant has to be a U.S. citizen, a permanent resident or have received an I-485 to be eligible for consideration. In general, a person is eligible for In-State classification (or to apply for residency reclassification) as a Massachusetts resident if the applicant (or his/her parents if a dependent student, or his spouse if married) has legally resided, or demonstrated intent to establish residency in Massachusetts, for approximately 12 months immediately preceding his/her enrollment, or re-enrollment, at UMass Lowell. Exceptions may apply, such as active duty station in Massachusetts or marriage to a Massachusetts resident. Please note: an applicant may not establish Massachusetts residency solely by attending UMass Lowell. Also, there are two other residency classifications with charges lower than the Out-of-State and International designations:

- Proximity Program—This program is for New Hampshire residents living within 20 miles of the UML campus, or that are required to attend a regional high school within 20 miles of the UML campus. Some exceptions apply. More information is found at www.uml.edu/Proximity.
- New England Regional Student Program (NERSP)—it offers students enrolled in qualified programs the opportunity to attend a public college or university in a New England state other than the one in which they live. NERSP-Qualifying Programs are those not offered on public campuses in a student's home state, with less than the out-of-state costs. More information is found at www.uml.edu/NERSP.

For the full details of UMass Lowell's policy on Residency Status for Tuition Classifications Purposes, please go to www.uml.edu/residency.
